The Pastor Speaks

HOW TO TEAR A NATION APART

The Dodge Main Plant of Chrysler Corporation is located in the Detroit suburb of Hamtramck. The building is a grimy, fifty-nine year old collection of red brick and concrete, and it holds nine-thousand of the most frightened, angry workers in America. To hear the workers tell it, the man who doesn't pack a gun, a knife, or length of pipe with his lunchbox is either foolish or suicidal. One union official said, "Just watch the parking lot. You'll see five or six guys get together in a group, and they'll all watch to see if everybody is in his car and all right before any of them leave. About a year ago a guy got his throat slit and just lay there over the weekend before they found him."

The violence in America's factories, unfortunately, is beginning to reflect what is going on outside the factories. Inside the factories rising crime rates and an influx of drugs have combined with racial tensions to produce an explosive mixture which worries management, labor, and government officials.

Management in many of the nation's larger plants are beginning to worry that the tensions within the plants influence the quality of the product. Labor leaders are reluctant to admit that they can't control their rank and file, but it's coming to this point. Workers are often downright scared.

Last October a twenty-three year old newcomer to the East Pittsburg Workers of Westinghouse Electric Corporation exploded into violence when his foreman dressed him down for absenteeism and ordered him to clean up a wash room. The foreman wound up with twenty-three stitches in his head and face.

The added problem of drug usage is appearing in the factories. One union official added, "We are faced with dope, people being hopped up, and also, the great number of people carrying guns and knives in the plant. The average guy who wants to work and be left alone is not safe any more."

What does all of this mean? The writer of Proverbs said in Proverbs 14:34, "Righteousness exalteth a nation: but sin is a reproach to any people." The plain fact of the matter is that righteous living tends to be a cohesive, binding, redeeming force in a nation, but ungodliness tears the very fabric of

THE BIBLE SPEAKS

BY LAWRENCE W. ALTHOUSE

THE PEACEMAKER

Lesson for September 6, 1970

Background Scripture: Genesis 26; Matthew 5:9; James 4:1-3, Devotional Reading: Romans 12: 14-21.

WANTED: Peacemakers like Isaac.

REWARD: Blessed are the peacemakers for they shall be called the sons of God.

If God were in the habit of running classified advertisements in this newspaper, the one above might well be among them. The world certainly needs peacemakers like Isaac today.

What's so special about Isaac?

Let's review what we know about him. He was the son of Abraham and the father of Jacob and Esau. A famine was rising in the land and God instructed him to live in the valley of Gebar. The people who lived there, the Philistines, welcomed him at first, but when Isaac became quite prosperous, they forced him to leave.

Another Well!

So Isaac moved out into a more barren area and dug a well. As soon as the well was dug, the Philistines decided it was on their property. So Isaac dug another well and this one was also claimed by others. But Isaac moved on and dug another well, and no one bothered him about this one.

The situation I've just described had all the makings of a war. Isaac's Philistine neighbors were jealous and envious of his prosperity. They became greedy, coveting something for which they had not labored. And this is still the source of so much hostility and tension in the world today, the seeds from which are spawned great and bloody conflicts.

Isaac was a peacemaker. He worked miracles in human relationships. What was his secret? He was no diplomatic genius, so diplomacy is not the answer. He had no great army, so no one was afraid of his military might. What then made him a man of peace?

Saving 'Face,' Losing Peace

The key, I believe, is in the fact that, unlike most men, Isaac was not handicapped by an inflexible pride. He was not a coward and would not back down upon his principles. Had the Philistines tried to take away his right to worship God they would have learned that quickly enough. But he was a man who could compromise on nonessentials. He would fight, but what he fought for had to be worth fighting for. He would not fight for the sake of his pride.

How many wars have begun and continued simply because nations have taken stands on trivial matters and then felt compelled to fight for the sake of "saving face?" A case in point is the year 1917, the most costly year in the first World War. After both sides had lost some 900,000 casualties in the carnage of the Battle of the Somme, Germany and the Central Powers put out peace feelers for a negotiated peace. Britain and France, however, were committed to a policy of "unconditional surrender" and, instead of responding to the German peace efforts, a green light was given to British General Haig for the Flanders campaign. In five months, Haig sacrificed 400,000 British troops in an inflexible plan that at best gained an advance of 9,000 yards. By then, a negotiated peace was impossible!

The Cost Of Honor

After the Armistice the Allies, still committed to their "unconditional surrender," excluded both Germany and Russia from the peace table at Versailles and a treaty was signed that lasted only 20 years when Hitler used this unjust treaty as the means to rally a bitter Germany behind him. George Kennan, former ambassador to Russia, tells us: "A stable postwar arrangement . . . had been rendered impossible before the war even came to an end . . . by the principle of unconditional surrender."

Isaac, however, dug three wells and gave up the first two because he did not feel they were worth fighting over. That's what made him a peacemaker.
